

DESIGNING A LEAFLET

Leaflets are a useful way of giving people background information about what your organisation does, at relatively little expense. Think of leaflets as 'mini-booklets' which summarise your organisation's work. The sample below from Solihull Young Carers (Solihull Carers Centre) is a good example of how voluntary organisations can use information leaflets to get their message across.

For your leaflet to be really effective, you need to have a sound marketing strategy behind it. So, before you start, you need to have identified:

- Who your audience is – who do you want to read the leaflet?
- What they are likely to respond to – what kind of colours, text style, words, images?
- What you want them to think or understand when they read your leaflet – what do you want to get across?
- What you want them to do as a result

Get to grips with these and you are already half way to producing a successful leaflet – as it is more likely to capture your target audience's attention and imagination.

Front page should grab attention – include a headline, eye-catching design and your organisation's name.

Font at least 12pt

There are numerous formats for information leaflets but the most common is 'DL' – an A4 sheet in three.

Pictures visually demonstrate what you do

Using 'you' can help to hold people's attention

Make it relevant to the reader & state the benefits

Include relevant logos

Put contact and legal information on the back page
